How about this?

Q to Minister on Twitter from Tom Baird:

Didn't Ed Martin say the Astaldi contract was unit rate rather than lump sum? @DalleyDerrick @NalcorEnergy #nlpoli

Potential answer:

With engineering known for 100% of the materials 🔗 quantities, total price of the contract is a lump sum. Astaldi is responsible for work.

A shorter version for twitter (in two tweets):

Ed Martin stated that the Astaldi contract is for a defined scope based on unit rates w/ quantities fully defined based on 1/2 2/2 fully completed engr. W/ unit rates and quantities fully defined, this is a lump sum, and Astaldi is resp for completing the work
OK? 🔗🔗 then confirm with Min.

Hi Charles,

A couple of minor changes:

Ed Martin stated that the Astaldi contract is for a defined scope based on unit rates with quantities fully defined based on fully completed engineering. He explained that with unit rates and quantities fully defined, this is a lump sum contract and the contractor is responsible for completing the work scope.

Karen,

Pls advise of any concerns asap...

Q to Minister on Twitter from Tom Baird:

Didn't Ed Martin say the Astaldi contract was unit rate rather than lump sum? @DalleyDerrick @NalcorEnergy #nlpoli

Potential answer (please verify):

The cost of the Astaldi contract is a lump sum. It is a unit cost contract, but for a fixed amount of work. Since the amount of work is fixed, cost is a lump sum.

If I  responding, should I respond with my twitter account, or Ministers?
